'Options for energy buyers this winter': An Ofgem Seminar

Ofgem will be holding an all day seminar "Options for energy buyers this winter," on Monday 7 November 2005 in London. The seminar is aimed at providing energy buyers with information which will help them make informed decisions this winter about their energy consumption.

The opening address will be delivered by Ofgem's Chief Executive Alistair Buchanan and will be followed by a series of presentations from a variety of industry perspectives, together with question and answer sessions.

This seminar will also update delegates on the work Ofgem is taking forward in conjunction with industrial and commercial customers ahead of this winter to ensure there are no barriers to prevent industrial and commercial customers turning down their energy consumption in response to price signals from the energy market.

This seminar would therefore be of particular interest to those customers and customer representatives responsible for making energy purchasing decisions for this winter. Please forward this on to those people in your businesses or associations that this would be of most interest to.

Further information regarding this seminar will follow shortly. Limited spaces will apply on the day - to register your early interest, please contact wholesale.markets@ofgem.gov.uk.
