

To whom it may concern.

I object to the large scale wind farm on Shetland. It is whole-heartedly out of proportion to Shetland in size and expense. The detrimental effects it will have on Shetland's wildlife and fauna are unthinkable along with the effects of the people living among it. Would such a large scale wind farm be built around Ben Nevis, Loch Lomond, Loch Ness? I very much doubt it.

IS this an out of sight out of mind project?

A small scale wind farm on shetland to offset our carbon emissions and making our corner of the world a greener place is surely worth investigating, which could benefit the isles not only in carbon emissions but possible financial reward is surely a more worthwhile cause, would you not think? Rather than filling the pockets of a few, while passing the cost on to its consumers?
