

Dear Sir/Madam,

I write to share my strong objections regarding the proposed large windfarm set to cover a large proportion of hill on the Shetland Mainland.

Having seen the recent destructive landslides in Norway sweeping homes into the sea, I am shocked that the hills of central mainland Shetland - which has been identified as having the highest risk of landslides in the UK by the British Geological Society - are even being considered for such a costly venture.

Having spent the past few months at home, one of the key positives has been the awareness and abundance of nature, including rare species and schedule 1 breeding birds spotted in the very hills which should under no circumstances be turned into a giant industrial windfarm.

I am not against renewable energy, but this project is not right for this valuable ecological environment, please reconsider before irreparable damage is done.

Yours sincerely
